CLAW is a non-profit organization focused on the well being of L.A. wildlife and their habitat. One type of data we collect is documentation of what species are in an area. Identifying critical open space with trail cameras ensures that we can maintain the best possible ecosystem services such as pollination and pest predation and maintain buffers between urbanization and open space to the benefit of residents and wildlife. These cameras will replace two existing cameras in the Bel Air Beverly Crest region, which are not operating correctly as equipment in the elements year-after-year tends to wear out and fail.
